The image is of cement silos at Geelong, Victoria, painted and photographed by Tyrone Wright (born 1980), known commercially as Rone, a Victorian resident and internationally renowned street artist working out of Everfresh studios in Collingwood, Melbourne.

Rone's work has been acquired by the National Gallery of Australia. He has been commissioned by the National Gallery of Victoria to work with Jean Paul Gaultier, and has been shown by galleries in London, Berlin and New York. See: www.r-o-n-e.com/about for more information.

Rone has also painted wheat silos in Lascelles, Victoria, which are part of a 200km long Silo Art Trail snaking through Victoria's Western Wimmera/Mallee region. This development has revitalised the silo towns and brought thousands of new visitors to the region. The artist's description of the artwork pictured:

(Centre) Cor Horsten worked at this site for over 35 years. Cor now volunteers his time at a local retirement home and hand makes wooden toys that are gifted to children about to go into surgery.

(Right) Kelly Cartwright grew up in Portarlinton, just outside Geelong. At 15, due to an aggressive cancer, she had her right leg removed. Despite this, she has since won Gold & Silver Medals at the Paralympics in Long Jump & 100 Metre Sprint.
